Euripedes' 'Trojan Women' meets 'The Vagina Monologues' and 'Lilith Fair' in Charles Mee's warped, gorgeously lyrical open source project.

It's stylish black box bohemian goodness, experimental theater you can watch over a glass of wine or two. It's immediate immersion; the theater you're in is a shelled-out holding pen for female prisoners, in the aftermath of the war. The city outside is in ruins; a dirty bomb codenamed 'Trojan Horse' turned it into a nuclear wasteland four days ago. And there's a chance, if you sit up front, that you might just become part of the show...
